

John McCormack
Sings Civil War Songs

At the battle of Balls Bluff, Va., in the Civil War, Lieut. William Brown, only 18 years old, was killed after an heroic effort in conveying many wounded men across the river to safety. This incident inspired Geo. F. Root to write that famous war-time song, "The Vacant Chair." McCormack, the great tenor, with the aid of a fine male chorus has just made a VICTOR record of this song. You may hear it at BERRY-HILLS, where VICTOR instruments and records may be purchased at eastern prices. Very easy weekly payments. Plan now on a VICTOR from Berryhill's for the family's Christmas present.

IMPORTANCE OF SHEEP IS SHOWN AT FAIR

The sheep exhibit at the fair this year is particularly good. A new barn convenient for visitors was put up this year, and all the pens are full. Several large flocks of sheep are

A COHANESQUE MR. JONES

Monday night at the Elks theatre the Elks Redmond Stock Company scored another success and a most emphatic one in their presentation of George M. Cohan's famous New York play, "Broadway Jones."

The story of Broadway Jones (Roscoe Karns) is decidedly Cohanesque. It is one of those simple straightaway stories that increases the interest until the end. First and foremost, it is a comedy of the sort that keeps an audience in good humor. Jackson Jones is a native of Connecticut and a young millionaire who goes to New York City to spend his money and set the fastest pace that Broadway has ever known. He intends literally to "burn up the town." He succeeds in getting separated from his money with amazing rapidity and eventually becomes known as "Broadway Jones." Finally his money is gone and he begins to look around for some means of existence. Almost before he knows it he finds himself engaged to a wealthy widow well along in years. She has a million dollars and wants a husband, and Jones is about to supply the want when one of his friends, Robert Wallace, steps in and saves him.

The Redmonds in the characterization of the various roles give an excellent performance and the play swings along at a rapid rate throughout the entire four acts. The stage settings are particularly pleasing, especially the one in the first act, which shows "Broadway's" home in New York. The set in the fourth act showing the roof garden party is also much above the average.

As an exhilarating, amusing, clean and wholesome comedy and a most amusing stage story, "Broadway Jones" is a real winner, and the Redmond presentation at the Elks is more than worth while attending.

down from the north part of the state. There are many varieties of sheep, all of excellent quality.

The sheep industry in Arizona brings several million dollars annually into the state, and the new barn, and the cooperation of the exhibitors is a recognition of the importance of the sheep industry. Fair visitors should not fail to see the sheep exhibit.

OATMAN SECRET GOLD MINE STOCK PERMITS

An investment permit was issued yesterday by the corporation commission to the Oatman Secret Gold Mining company, the officials in the company being some prominent mining men of this city and also of Oatman and Bisbee. The company proposes to sell 400,000 shares of stock at not less than ten cents a share.

This company owns nearly 120 acres of mining property which is divided into six claims, all in the vicinity of Secret Pass, and near the Moss mines at Oatman.

James Leeson of Bisbee is the head of the company, and is also president of the Higgins Leasing company. The company has a capital of $150,000.

AUTOMOBILE WRECKED BY DEMENTED MAN

While laboring under some mental delusion A. T. Minns, purloined an automobile belonging to a man by the name of Pike, in the southern part of the town and wrecked it while trying to remove the motor. The auto was found on South Seventh avenue near the river. It was standing under a tree. Minns had tried to jerk the motor out of it by means of a block and chain which he had attached to the limb of the tree. He had removed none of the bolts so that the engine had been literally torn out. Afterward he had let the motor fall, breaking it also.

Somehow when the wreck was discovered in the morning, suspicion was directed against Minns. Meanwhile the sheriff's office had been informed and an officer visited the scene and brought the chain and block away. Not long after that Minns hurried to the sheriff's office and demanded the property, saying that it belonged to the Gazette, where he was employed. He was wildly excited and said the paper could not come out without the chain and block; presumably it was needed to raise the heavy incubators of M. A. T. to the top of the editorial page.

Sheriff Adams urged Minns to contain himself and tell what he knew about the wrecked automobile. He said the knew nothing; that he had been at home all night and it was only by accident that he had learned that there was a wreck; he happened to be taking a stroll in that direction and heard about it. He told some conflicting stories of his movements and admitted that he had lied. He was locked up for an investigation.

He had been employed by the Gazette for several years and was a good worker in the mailing department. It had been noticed for some time that his mind seemed cloudy. He made

ED GOFF WAS GIVEN HIS SECOND BATH

His First Was in His Childhood in Tennessee.

Accidents will happen to the best of automobiles, and even a Ford will sometimes get in trouble. Ed Goff, who came from California, overland, found his Ford in a bad way when he reached Coldwater, where he asked permission to use the blacksmith shop owned by W. G. Moore. He is alleged to have loaded up the machine with a blacksmith's complete outfit. He was caught with the goods in Florence, where the arrest was made. Goff was arraigned in Judge DeSouza's court yesterday, and his examination set for Monday.

But before Justice DeSouza had a chance to take jurisdiction in his case, the Kangaroo court had already disposed of it to its satisfaction, and to more than the satisfaction of Goff. When he was ushered in he was at once charged with breaking into the sacred precincts of the court and the usual fine of one dollar was imposed. Goff, who had been stubborn throughout, refused to pay. He was given the alternative of taking a bath, but he did not want a bath; it had not been many years since he had one in Tennessee. The court ordered water turned into the tub, and when it was filled, Goff was thrown in, clothes and all. He was more tractable when he got his breath. The prisoners gave him a dry suit of clothes, then turned their attention to other matters, thinking that he would make the change. But when the officers called for him a few minutes later to take him to Justice DeSouza's court he was dripping wet. The attention of the Kangaroo court was called to his moist condition, and when he refused to array himself in the dry clothing, he was forcibly stripped and dressed.

had been sending mail in all directions without regard to its intended destination. The owner of the automobile is a poor man and unable to pay for the repairs which will have to be made.

DR. HUGHES ON ART OF LIVING

Everyone who heard Dr. Matt Hughes last night at the high school auditorium was delighted with his eloquence and logic. His subject was "The Fine Art of Living." The speaker's personal mannerism and magnetism held the large audience wide awake from beginning to end. After the announcements by Secretary Blair the speaker was introduced by Dr. Harker, an old acquaintance and co-worker.

"There are many things we want but do not get. Man formerly lived in caves and wanted a home and he developed the art of architecture," he said.

"Our grandfathers believed in a world created in seven days. Today that is disputed, we are living in a scientific world. Almighty God did not create tunnels, railroads, etc. He left this to man. He gave man the raw material, the ore forest and coal. Of all the arts created in this world by man the greatest is the art of living. A man's name gives no information about the man. Mr. Poor may be a millionaire, Mr. Short six feet tall, Mr. White may be as black as your hat. Our tombstones tell when we were born and when we died.

"The impression that you make is between the time that you were born and die.

"We have pure food laws for our stomachs. In the future we will have pure food laws for our hearts and minds. What you feed your mind on that will you become."

Dr. Hughes injected just enough humor without losing its dignity to hold the closest attention. His speech was faultless and he spoke without notes. This lecture is one of the best yet heard on this year's lecture course.

Dr. Hughes was delighted with Phoenix and the Arizona climate. In company with H. M. Blair and General Simpson he visited the date farm, Indian school, and other places of interest. He leaves today for Los Angeles.

REMARKABLE WEDDING GIFT FOR MRS. GALT

Mrs. Norman S. Galt, soon to be the first lady of the land, is to receive as her wedding gift from Vice President and Mrs. Thomas B. Marshall, a remarkably fine Navajo chief's blanket. The Marshalls realized that all that the art and skill of the civilized world could produce, would be represented in the wedding gifts to be sent to Mrs. Galt, and felt that undoubtedly some rare and unique article from the wonderland of the "uncivilized" southwest might be acceptable, therefore, the Navajo blanket.

The blanket was chosen from the famous stock of the Graves Indian Shop, and is one of the finest and most valuable specimens of the Navajo weaver's art ever seen in Phoenix. Approximately five and one-half by seven feet, it is large enough to carry a striking pattern in black, white and blue, with a touch of red. It is wonderfully woven and of the distinctive design that marks all genuine chief's blankets.

Those who may wish to see the blanket are welcome to call and see it today, as it is not to be expressed east until this evening.

A MONEY MAKING SECRET
How did you make your great for-ture?" someone asked Lord Rothschild.

"By always selling a little too soon," was his reply.

When, as a very young bank president, Effingham B. Morris had regretted the sale of bonds before the big rise came, A. J. Drexel parted him upon the shoulder and gave him this fatherly advice:

"My boy, never grieve over a small profit. Save your regrets for the times you will have to take a loss."

Rothschild and Drexel meant exactly the same thing—if you wait to catch a whale you may not even get enough fish for supper.—From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.
